

The Biggest Movement of Humankind: Peace Fight in Hungary
Published by the Ministry of People's Education

We are thinking about peace when we plant a "peace-tree" for our child, so that he lives as peaceably and long as the walnut tree, which will provide him with shade.

We write the word "peace" even on the walls of our houses.

We discuss recent events in the fight for peace in the streets of the village.

Nowadays, the gatherings of women in family homes of urban apartment buildings are no longer just aimless chit-chat. They are talking about peace.

Just as in the cities, villages and fields, peace is studied and discussed at school as well.

Who should be fighting for peace? All virtuous people. Bigger and bigger numbers of people join the fight for peace in our country as well. The worker, the engineer, the factory manager, are all members of the peace movement.

... the working peasant...

... the tractor driver...

... the teacher...

... the draughtswoman...

... the nurse...

... the policewoman...

... the housewife: all decent people.

The worldwide peace movement mobilized hundreds of millions of people everywhere. The proposal issued from Stockholm by the World Peace Council was unanimously accepted by the people of Hungary.

When the worker signed his name on the petition for peace, he was thinking about his family and productive work.

When the peasants signed their names, they saw their abundantly fertile fields.

The mothers signed the peace petition so that their children would never stop smiling.

We, Hungarian peace fighters, always raised our voice when a crime was committed against humanity and peace. We held a concerned meeting in Budapest to protest the bacterium war of American imperialists against Korea.

We helped other nations with acts of peace. Hungarian workers extended their support to the heroically fighting Korean people. We gave them medical equipment, and sent them our doctors. We supplied clothing to the refugee orphans.

We cheered up the heroic Korean fighters with small packages.

The decorated train transported a lot of love, joy and happiness to Korea, where they are fighting for us, and our peace, as well.

The 3rd Hungarian Peace Congress in November 1951 was an outstanding milestone in the fight for peace. The whole country prepared for it. Ad-hoc rallies were held in factory workshops.

Small get-togethers in the village cultural centers elected the delegates who would participate in the congress.

A huge crowds said goodbye to the delegates at the railway station.

The Hungarian workers firmly hold their ground in the front lines of peace. Valuable victories for peace were won during the building of our new country. András Kohut, miner from Petőfibánya, talks about this.

János Péti, President of the cooperative farm in Tamási, talks about the integrity of cooperative farm workers.

The delegates applauded loudly, indicating that they agree with the speeches.

The ambassadors of peace took their satchels and traveled to the county capitals. The peace messages were augmented even en route: this conductor also put a letter into the peace satchel.

And then the day came when the Hungarian people learned about the great honor that was bestowed upon them: the leader of the world peace movement, the World Peace Council, will hold its next session in Budapest. The whole country was eagerly preparing. There was an enthusiastic meeting in the Lime and Cement Works of Hejőcsaba as well.

In the afternoons the girls and women embroidered their feeling of love into the peace satchels, which will be used to carry the peace messages of the Hungarian people.

Our people don't spare any energy to achieve peace, which is waiting on our doorstep. The great peace assembly on Kossuth Square mirrored our unity and strength. The world was assured again: the Hungarian people is the people of peace, our country is a country of peace. Let's work for this, let's go on building this.

The end.

The decorated train is leaving for Budapest in a few moments. The sign on the engine says: "For peace!"

We are also fighting for the release of Jacques Duclos, the famous Frenchman who was innocently jailed. The protest of the nations opened up the gates of the prison.

Published by the Slide Department of Hungarian Photo, commissioned by the Ministry of Public Education. Budapest. 1953.